ON CAMPUS

**Monday, Nov. 16 the Red Cross will sponsor a bloodmobile from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. in D-10-12 of the Student Activities building.

A physician and several registered nurses will be on hand, and students will serve punch and cookies to donors. Aimed primarily at students, faculty and staff of the college, the goal of the "mini-bloodmobile" is at least 50 pints.

Terry Vacalis and Mrs. Kathryn Donovan are campus co-chairman, and Mr. Vacalis points out that donors and their families are covered for all blood needs without charge for six months following a donation. Those who apply to contribute blood but are not accepted for medical reasons are covered personally for the six month period, he said.

**Wednesday, Nov. 18 junior college representatives from seven southeastern states will be on campus to be briefed on two new programs being offered by the Veteran's Administration.

The American Association of Junior Colleges has received a two-year grant from the Carnegie Foundation to incorporate both the Predischarge Education Program (PREP) and a Tutorial Assistance Program into junior college programs across the country.

Dr. John Mallan, national director of programs for veterans and servicemen; James Smith, northeastern coordinator; and Lee John Betts, southern regional coordinator, will be on hand to present the programs to the junior college educators. Bob Winn is local coordinator of the meeting.

**Thursday, Nov. 19 Mr. Harry K. Wong, high school biology and general science teacher from California who won Yale University's "Distinguished Teacher Award" in 1963 will be on campus from 1 to 4 p.m. conducting a workshop on "The Non-Involved Student" for high school administrators from the five county metropolitan area.

The workshop will be in room B-10 of the lecture hall, and the science faculty is invited to attend. Mr. Wong was the subject of a feature article in the October, 1965 issue of "Reader's Digest", and a limited number of copies of the article are available in the Community Services Office.

**Some 23 participants turned out for the Student Government Association's second Sports Car Rally last Sunday afternoon. Although faculty, staff and members of the Georgia Sports Car Association also participated, only students were eligible for prizes, and those winners were: 1. 1970 Plymouth Barracuda; driver, Mike Whitfield; navigator, Danny Hager. 2. 1964 Volkswagon; driver, Ray Blount; navigator, Tom Malcolm. 3. 1970 Fiat Spider; driver, Doug Reynolds; navigator, Elton Coleman.

**Lieutenant Governor George T. Smith addressed the monthly meeting of the South Metropolitan Atlanta Government Areas (SMAGA) last Thursday night. Approximately 30 local officials turned out to hear Smith speak on how local governments could deal effectively with the General Assembly.

**Mr. Weber at the Bookstore says he has two crates of "faculty packs" for women, and that he will soon have those for men. The packs feature some $1.20 worth of goodies such as soap, gum, pens, etc. for only 35 cents, and you invited to get one at the bookstore.

**The Comptroller would like to thank the faculty and staff for parking correctly, and says that it has been a great help.

INTRODUCING

came to Clayton as assistant professor of psychology in the fall quarter of 1969.

Previously, he was at the University of Georgia, where he received his Master's Degree in psychology in 1966, and is a candidate for a Ph.D. in clinical psychology.

A native of New York, Mr. Goldstein did his undergraduate work at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, and his clinical internship in Connecticut. A transplanted southerner, he says that "the weather is the most fantastic thing the South has to offer," pointing out that, while in Connecticut, he once "couldn't find my car for three days because of the snow."

This, combined with the fact that he finds the academic more appealing than full-time clinical work, led Mr. Goldstein to turn down a scholarship offer from Connecticut which would have committed him to clinical work afterward to take one at the University of Georgia.

During his five years there, Mr. Goldstein said that he noticed a great change in the atmosphere of the university itself, and also acquired two interests not included on the standard training-of-psychologists list.

"When I first went there," he said, "Georgia was very much the traditional southe university, with fraternities playing a major role in the social life; while I was there, I saw a lot of that change."

"Unlike most psychologists," he continued, "I am interested in physiology, and while I was at Georgia I spent a year in the vet school taking courses."

During that time, Mr. Goldstein was requested to write an article on "The Psychotherapeutic Value of Pets," which was later published in a veterinarian magazine. "Pets definitely do have a psychotherapeutic value," he says, "and are one of the ways people can be taught to relate to people by first teaching them to relate to another living thing."

Mr. Goldstein also became interested in hypnosis at Georgia, and its potential use in psychological treatment. Most psychologists, he points out, do not use hypnotherapy, first because Freud stopped using it after a facial operation made it painful for him to speak--thus causing those who followed him to discontinue its use--and, second, because of its frequent use as a stage trick.

Mr. Goldstein, however, has published articles on "Hypnosis and Hypnotherapy" and "Hypnotically Induced Amnesia versus Ablation of Memory," and will write his Ph.D. dissertation on hypnosis and auditory perception. He has recently received a certificate from the American Institute of Hypnosis.

Mr. Goldstein was married in August, and he and his wife, a registered nurse from New York, have recently bought a house in DeKalb County.

"Potpourri" is published weekly by the Office of Information Services to provide news of interest to the faculty and staff. You are invited to submit news by the Wednesday noon preceding publication on Friday.
